

Hemorrhoids in Children: Some Important Info

Hemorrhoids are a common condition that is mostly connected to those older in age. However, it actually occurs at any stage of life regardless of age, gender, race or physical health so it is not unusual to have hemorrhoids in children.

“ The symptoms of having this kind of a condition include a child getting agitated when sitting down because he's experiencing pain in his anus. This individual may also scratch it more often as it can be itchy. Often, the condition is also preceded by constipation. The most obvious indicator in which your child is suffering from hemorrhoids is when there is blood blended on the bar stool, in the water of the toilet bowl, or on a tissue paper after a child poops. The symptoms of such a disease may frighten your son or daughter so a mother or father needs to be telling especially since it isn't dangerous. However, it is still best to go to a paediatrician because this problem shares symptoms with other illnesses that are life threatening.

What are Hemorrhoids?

Hemorrhoids are usually when the veins of the rectum become swollen. This is caused by various factors, equally innate as well as from one's lifestyle. If your child is prone to eating unhealthy foods and spending their day indoors instead of out playing, then it is most likely that their particular stool is hard which, in turn, has a bearing on the manifestation of hemorrhoids. Occasionally, but not in all cases, they can be visibly seen around the anus as inflamed parts of skin.

Kinds of Hemorrhoids

There are two kinds of hemorrhoids: the external hemorrhoid and also the internal hemorrhoid.

The external kind can either be visibly seen or touched near the entrance of the rectum.

- Internal hemorrhoids are further up the rectum and may only be indicated by blood in the stool.
- This can be confirmed by a physician through different medical tests.
- There are four types which are signalled by the state of the prolapse.
- Prolapse occurs when the internal hemorrhoid extend so much it gets pushed out of the anus.
- Listed here are the classifications.

A. Grade I: Lack of prolapse b. Grade II: Prolapse can be seen in the course of release of stool but goes back into the rear end on it's own c. Grade III: Prolapse occurs while undergoing bowel movement and also must be pushed back d. Grade IV: Prolapse is constantly present.
