Hemorrhoid remedies are all over the web and can help you get rid of hemorrhoids or piles quickly and effectively if you know which treatments to use and why. This article focuses on what causes piles (hemorrhoids) and how to get rid of them for good.

Your own hemorrhoids produce only mild discomfort, your doctor may suggest over-the-counter creams, ointments, suppositories or pads. These products contain ingredients, such as witch hazel or even hydrocortisone, that can relieve pain and itching, at least temporarily. They can cause side effects, such as skin rash, inflammation and skin thinning. If a blood clot has created within an external hemorrhoid, your doctor can easily remove the clot with a simple incision, which might provide quick relief. For persistent bleeding or painful hemorrhoids, your doctor may recommend an additional minimally invasive procedure. These treatments above can be achieved in your doctor's office or other outpatient setting.

- Hemorrhoid banding can be uncomfortable and may cause bleeding, that might begin two to four days after the procedure but is rarely severe.
- While the injection causes little or no pain, it may be less effective than rubber band ligation.
- While coagulation offers few side effects, it's associated with a higher rate of hemorrhoids returning than is the rubber band treatment.
- If additional treatments haven't been successful or you have large hemorrhoids, your doctor may recommend a surgical procedure.
- Surgery can be carried out on an outpatient basis or you may want to stay in the hospital overnight.
- Surgery is actually the most effective and complete way to remove hemorrhoids, but it also has the highest rate of complications.
